Contributors to this issue:

BEN KAFKA is now an Assistant Professor in the Department of Culture and Communication at NYU, having previously been a member of the Princeton Society of Fellows. He is completing a study of paperwork and political thought in the era of the French Revolution.

DANIEL SELCER is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Philosophy at Duquesne University. He is currently working on a book about the relationship between seventeenth-century philosophical discourse and figures of print culture (encyclopedias, libraries, books, and so on).

CATHERINE GALLAGHER is a Professor of English at the University of California, Berkeley. She is the author of Nobody's Story: The Vanishing Acts of Women Writers in the Marketplace, 1670–1820 (1995), Practicing New Historicism (with Stephen Greenblatt, 2001), and The Body Economic: Life, Death, and Sensation in Political Economy and the Victorian Novel (2006).

MARK MASLAN is Associate Professor of English at the University of California, Santa Barbara. His contribution to this issue is drawn from his current book project, False Lives: Counterfactual Testimony and Postmodern Truth.

SARAH LOCHLANN JAIN is an Assistant Professor of Cultural Anthropology at Stanford University. Her book Injury was recently published by Princeton University Press (2006), and her book Commodity Violence: American Automobility is forthcoming from Duke University Press. She is currently working on a book on cancer politics entitled A Cancer Elegy.

PAUL K. SAINT-AMOUR is Associate Professor of English at Pomona College. He is at work on a book about modernism, temporality, and total war.

ANDREW H. MILLER is the author of Novels Behind Glass and the editor of the journal Victorian Studies. He has just completed a manuscript on the desire to improve and the history of that desire in nineteenth-century Britain. His essay in this issue is part of a new project entitled On Not Being Someone Else.
